Butternut milkweed, bee balm, and yellow coneflower blanket the prairie now, representing the 600 types of plants that intermingle with over 150 grass species. Bison were the native grazers that shaped the prairie over time, and here at the preserve the current herd of 1,200 bison will eventually grow to 3,000. For now the acres are also leased for cattle grazing which serves both as income for preserve stewardship and as a forum for research on the effects of cattle grazing on grassland.
